Working around Power - Jason Matity

A number of significant incidents occur around power lines in Saskatchewan and across the country when people are farming and doing construction work such as new builds, renovations, landscaping and others.

At best, service disruptions occur, which cost economies millions of dollars in lost productivity. At worst, people are injured or killed. With a little planning, these incidents can be avoided and not only save lives, but minimize disruptions to your families, friends, neighbours and your local businesses.

There are two separate but related presentations depending on your industry background.

About the Speaker:

Jason Matity is a well-known public speaker. With more than 20 years of experience in the television and public relations fields, he has a unique ability to engage and empower audiences through his presentations and story-telling abilities. He might even have a fishing story or two to tell!

Those local to southern Saskatchewan might remember him from his reporting days at CTV and his fishing show Reel Em In.

Jason's current role is the Consultant, Safety Awareness and Promotions for SaskPower. Before the pandemic, he travelled the province and speaking to communities, municipalities, First Nations, farmers, contractors, construction professionals, firefighters, EMS services and more about how to be safe around electricity. Now he has the opportunity to present to all of us wherever we may be, through the power of the internet.

Join us now in a presentation on how to avoid line contacts and what to do should a contact occur. His tips could save your life!
